

Hey I kind of think both sides can be really hypocritical.

user1

If I had to say, I guess Republicans. But I agree with you

user2

Yeah, I think especially when it comes to the opposite side, both of them can get hypocritical about each other.

user1

Yes exactly. I think the focus should not be on faults or negative aspects

user2

Focusing on who is more hypocritical doesn't really solve anything at all

user2

We as humans usually reflect on ourselves, daily

user2

I agree

user1

Like an example of this could be the Democrats disagreeing with the election results in 2016 and the Republicans doing so in in 2020.

user1

We can find fault and negatives about ourselves all too easily

user2

Both sides can be in the wrong

user1

Yes absolutely

user2

I did see a trend start though

user2

What do you think about news casters on either side? They can be very hypocritical.

user1

Like Fox vs CNN

user1

And I guess the trend of denying results outright was from the (R)

user2

Yes newscasters and news companies are mostly entertainment I believe, entertainment disguised as serious. LOL

user2

So true, its annoying seeing people follow them blindly!

user1

Yes it's important to consider everything we are told and shown. To have a good understanding and be understanding of others

user2

Especially understanding those who follow blindly

user2

YES, and take everything into account. Even if it doesn;t necessarily support our ideas.

user1

Yes, it's not wise especially by making up our minds and deciding something or believing something in haste

user2

It's healthy to question

user2

I agree

user1

Sometimes your opinion can be changed with proper evidence

user1

Yes which isn't a bad or good thing

user2

we search for truth

user2

People search for meaning i think imo, I like to know as much as possible is what i'm saying

user2

So true! Plus I think if everyone focused on that instead of being on their polar opposite sides then everyone could get along much easier

user1

Yes. Maybe there is some design in the polar opposite thing

user2